WORK SEARCH ACTIVITY RECORD

You MUST complete a weekly work search activity record for each week you file for unemployment benefits. It is your responsibility to provide the required information. Work search activity records may be reviewed at any time by both the Telephone Claim Centers and the JobConnect Offices, and you may be required to provide supporting documentation. You must conduct several different work search activities each week using methods customary to the occupation you are seeking. Failure to provide weekly work search activity records may result in a delay or denial of your benefits.

Complete the attached Work Search Activity Record and return it to the Division within eleven (11) days of filing your weekly claim for benefits. You should keep emails, confirmation pages, and any electronically submitted information as proof of your efforts.

What is considered an acceptable Work search activity?

Some acceptable work search activities would be to use the employment resources that are available at your local JobConnect office or Career Center. Another acceptable work search activity is to visit a job site or the employer's place of business and submit an application in person. Other acceptable methods would be to attend job search seminars or job fairs, use online talent platforms, professional networking sites such as LinkedIn and online job boards like Indeed, CareerBuilder or Monster, etc. Remember to document your work search activities by keeping copies of e-mails, flyers, online job postings you've applied for or confirmation of your online application acceptance.

What is not considered an acceptable work search activity?

An unacceptable work search activity would include duplicate postings of your resume on a job search website, submitting your application repeatedly to the same employer even though work is not available, or listing a job lead you just viewed on a website with no action taken.
